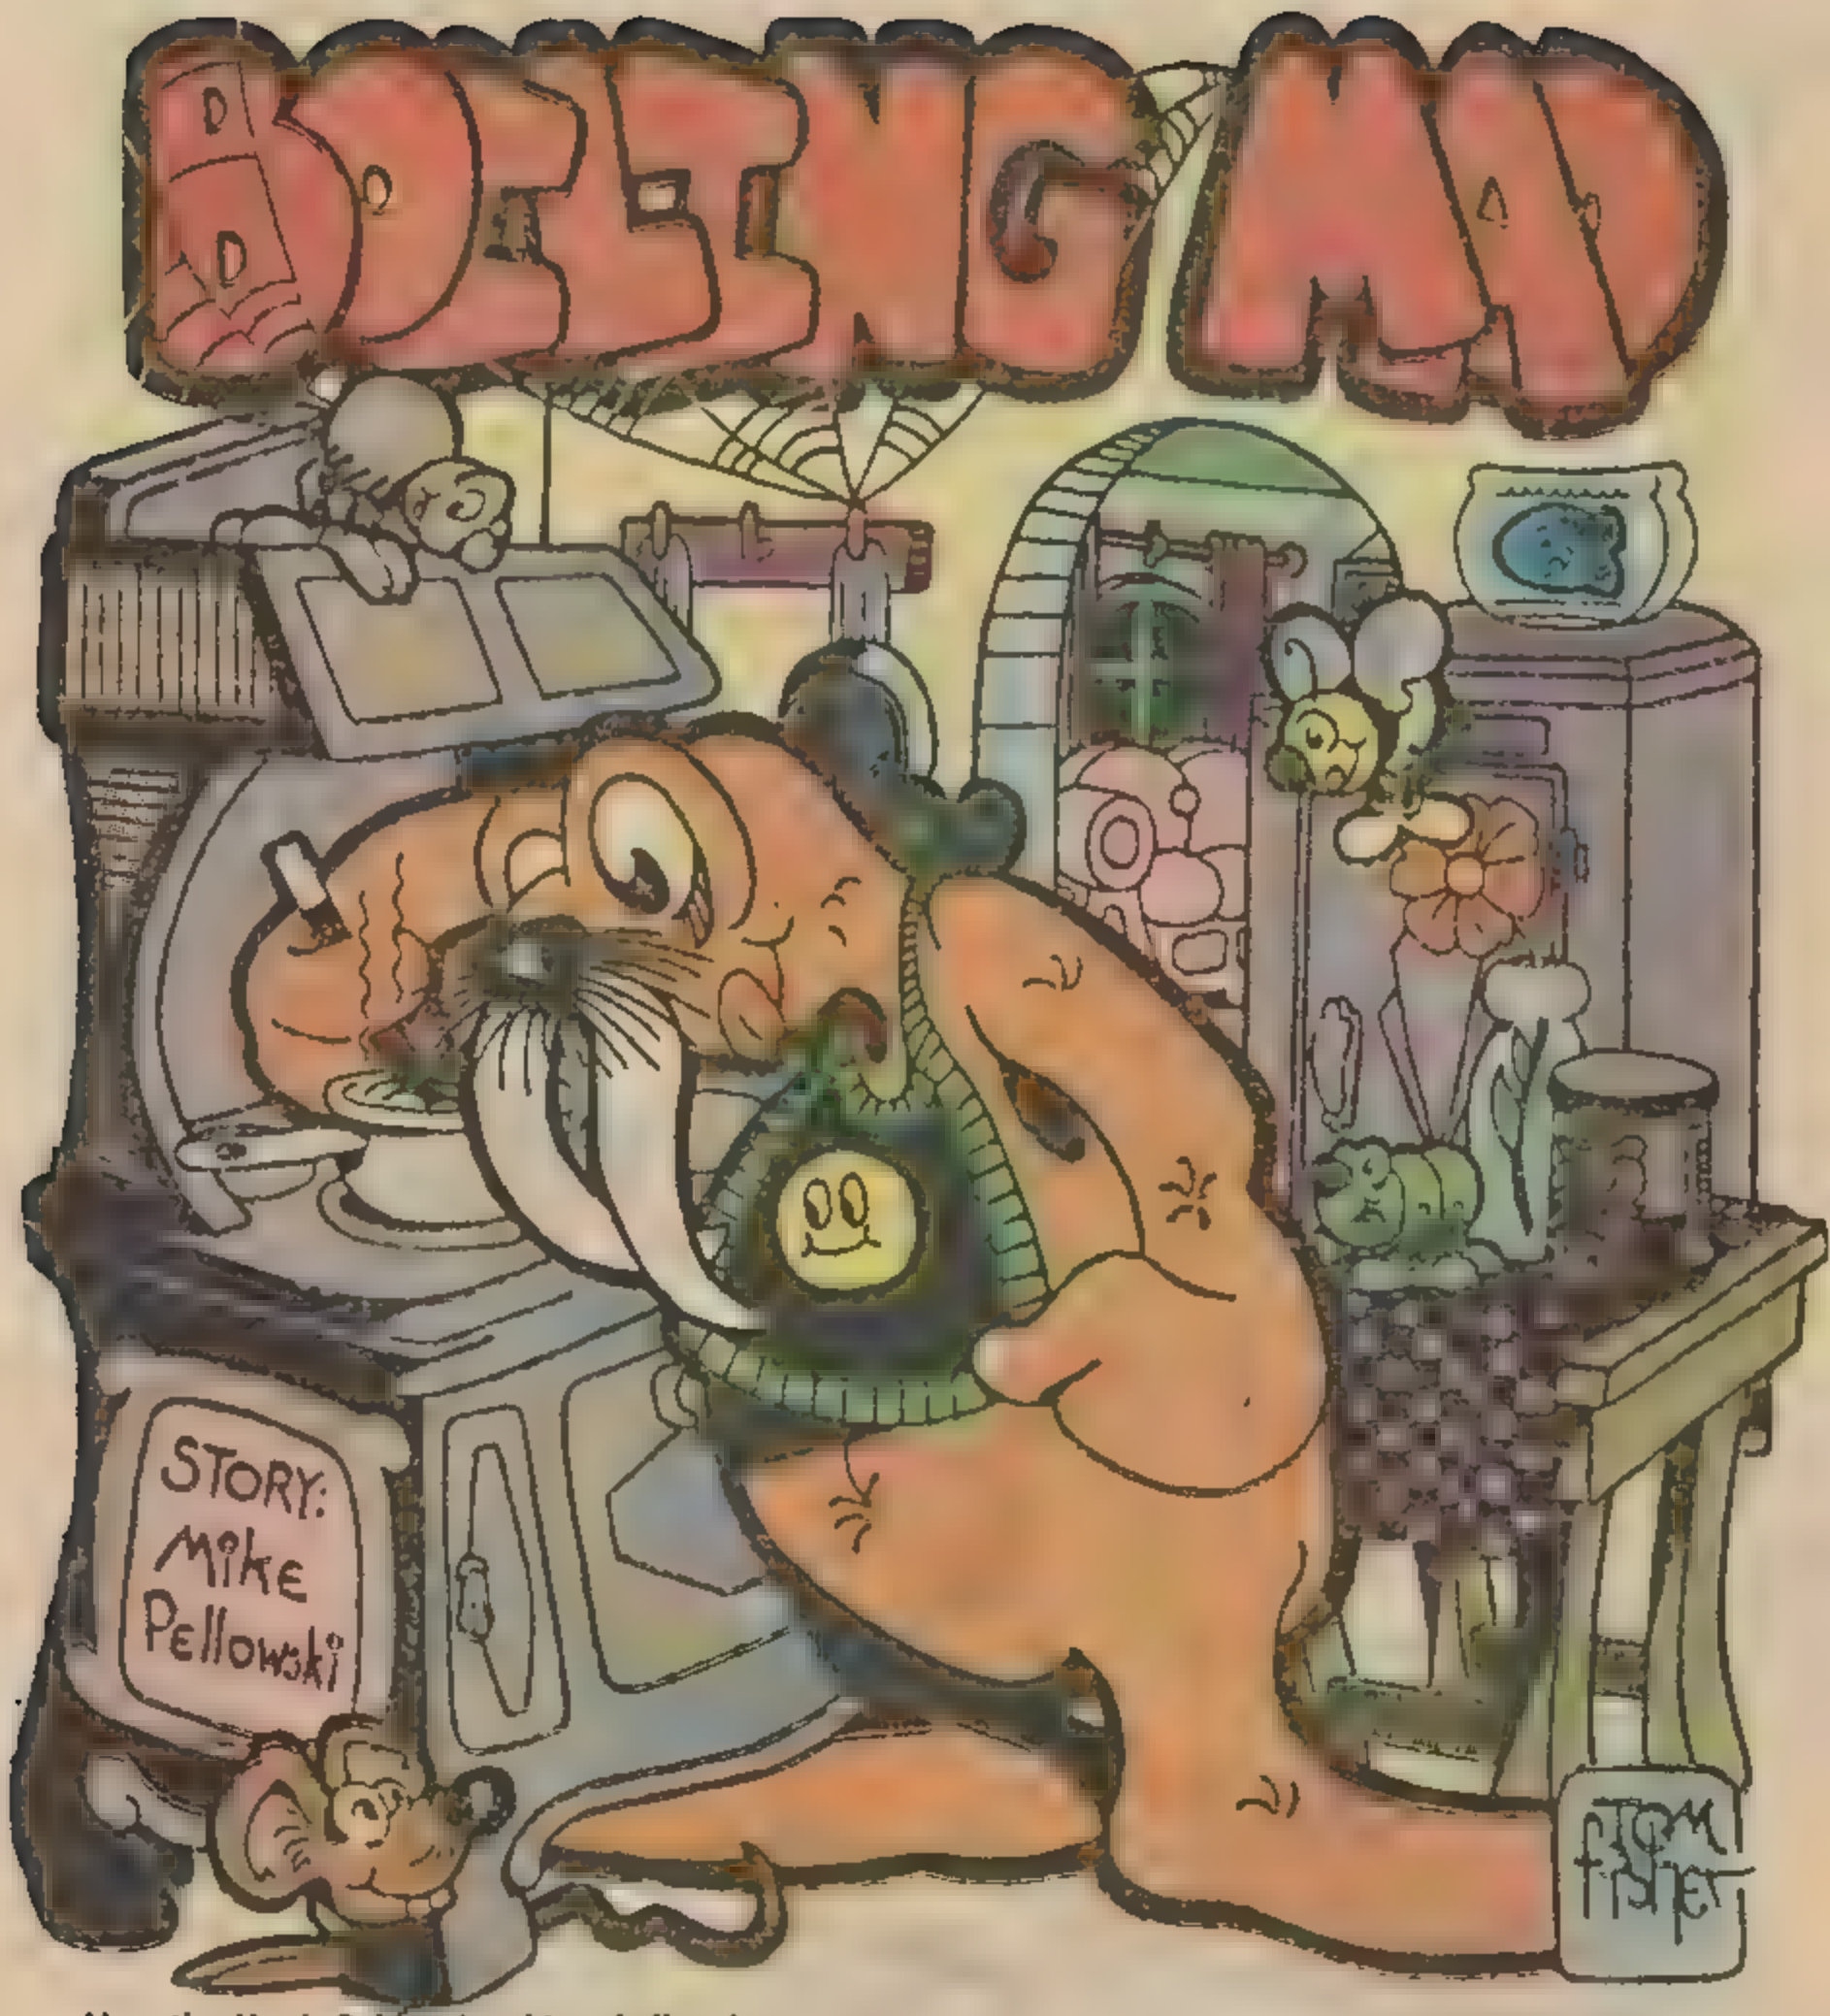
BOING MAD



Max, the Magic Rabbit, lived in a hollow log, tree-house with his friend, Waldo, the Walrus. Max and Waldo were buddies and business partners.

Max traveled around the Enchanted Forest giving magic shows and demonstrating his mystical powers. That was the way that Max earned his carrots. Waldo was Max's helper and assistant. They worked well together on stage and were the best of buddies at home.

The two pals had been through thick and thin together. Waldo had worked with Max when he was a bumbling, fumbling, bunny magician who couldn't do a single trick right.

Waldo had also been around on that glorious evening when Max had wished on a strange-looking, falling star. Max was holding his magic wand in his hand at the time and had wished to have real magic powers. He wished for the ability to perform mystical, magical feats just by waving his wand. His wish had come true.

There was only one, slight problem with Max's powers. They didn't always work. Sometimes, they didn't work the right way. Sometimes, his magic went haywire. Max had to be very careful with his powers.

"Good-night, Waldo," said Max to his pal one evening after a long, hard day. "I'm going to turn in early," said Max.

He yawned and patted his bunny nose with his furry paw. He stretched out his tired, bunny ears and wiggled his cotton tail. He placed his magic wand down on the coffee table in the living room and walked off towards his bedroom.

"I'll be going to bed myself in a little while," called Waldo to his pal. "I just want to have a little snack and finish watching the "All In The Cannery" show," explained Waldo, who was seated on the sofa with his eyes glued to the T.V. screen.

"Okay, Waldo," answered Max. "I hope you can find something to eat in the kitchen. There isn't much food in the pantry. We have to go shopping this week."

"I'll find something to eat," answered Waldo as Max went into his bedroom.

When the next commercial came on, Waldo hopped up and dashed into the kitchen. He wanted to hurry up and find something to eat without missing any of his favorite show.

Unfortunately for Waldo, all of the cupboards were bare. All he could find was a little bit of oatmeal left in the bottom of a small, cardboard barrel. It might have been enough to fill up a normal person, but Waldo wasn't normal. He had an appetite like a prehistoric monster. It would take a wheelbarrow full of oatmeal to fill up his huge stomach.

He took out a big pot, filled it with water and put it on the stove. When it started to boil, he put in the little bit of oatmeal.

Just then, he saw Max's magic wand lying on the coffee table and got an idea.

"I wonder if some of Max's power has rubbed off on his wand? Maybe I can use his magic to make more oatmeal for myself," he muttered.

He raced over to the table, picked up the wand and returned to the kitchen.

"Hocus-pocus, oatmeal increase in quantity," he mumbled. The magic worked. The little bit of oatmeal started to get bigger and bigger. More and more oatmeal started to boil in the huge pot.

Just then, Waldo heard his favorite show come back on. He didn't want to miss any of it. He waved the wand over the pot once again.

"Pot keep boiling until I tell you to stop!" he ordered. He put the wand down and ran back into the living room to watch T.V.

Minutes passed, and the oatmeal kept cooking. Waldo was so busy watching T.V. that he forgot all about the oatmeal. The oatmeal continued to increase in quantity, and the pot continued to boil. Oatmeal boiled out of the pot and onto the floor. It began to flood the house.

The smell of the oatmeal woke Max up. He opened his eyes and saw that his bed was floating on a sea of oatmeal. He jumped out of bed and ran into the living room.

He saw that Waldo had fallen asleep in front of the T.V. Oatmeal was everywhere. Max quickly grabbed his magic wand.

"Oatmeal, stop! Pot, stop!" he ordered as he waved the wand. The magic worked and everything stopped. "Oatmeal, disappear!" ordered Max. That didn't work. His magic had run out and left him with a house full of oatmeal. Max got a shovel and woke Waldo up.

"We'll have to shovel out the oatmeal," said Max to Waldo.

Waldo ran into the kitchen and got a spoon. He started to eat the oatmeal. "You shovel your way, and I'll shovel my way. I'm still hungry!" Waldo explained.
